“We can help our country to grow to the level of the most advanced contemporary societies.” With these words, Giorgio Napolitano urged young people not to leave Italy.

He gave his message of hope during the first “Salone della Giustizia” (Justice Exhibition), which opened in Rimini with a speech by Gianfranco Fini, the President of the Chamber of Deputies.

President Napolitano made an implicit reference to the letter published in the newspaper la Repubblica by the General Manager of Luiss University, Pier Luigi Celli, in which he invited his son to leave Italy because, according to him, “this is no longer a place where you can be proud to live.”
