

The new F4 is ready

After the great success achieved at Milan's EICMA Motorcycle Exhibition, where it was repeatedly voted the King of the Show, the F4 is ready to be delivered to the first enthusiasts that have been waiting for them for some time.

Despite an economic climate that, generally speaking, is not pleasant, and the fact that it is without a real owner, after Harley Davidson's decision to sell its share a little more than one year after purchasing it, MV Agusta is working at full capacity to satisfy the orders of clients who have already determined the success of the new Brutale, and who are anxiously awaiting the arrival of MV's new motorcycle.

"The company is doing its best to give as many motorcyclists as possible the opportunity to ride the Italian dream," MV Agusta said in a note. "The record-breaking technology (variable geometric air intake, traction control), the unsurpassed performance and the incredible design of what has always been judged to be the world's most beautiful sports motorcycle, have brought euphoria to sports motorcyclists, a euphoria that MV Agusta wants to satisfy to in every way."

The new F4 will be available from official MV Agusta dealers, at a price of €18,500.
